

Bernal residents like keeping things neighborly, safe and community-focused. Affordable housing helps preserve the historic diversity of Bernal that originally drew so many to the neighborhood. One thing people bring up when we door knock is the abandoned gas station on 30th & Mission St. Word on the street is it will come back online again, but with the Shell just south of that location, it seems that this would be a prime place for 100% affordable housing. San Francisco has thousands of units that have the permits, but don't have the funding. I would continue my work on a public bank to finance affordable housing, fighting to get the regional bond money flowing into our district, and pursuing funds at the federal level we haven't fully pursued as a city. My entire housing platform to build thousands of affordable housing units across San Francisco and in D9 is available at jackieforsf.com/housing
