

2025 MISSION LOCAL IMPACT REPORT

THANK YOU FOR MAKING MISSION LOCAL FREE FOR ALL TO READ

LETTER FROM THE EDITORS

Dear readers,

We rounded out 2025 very well: In December, Nieman Lab, the Harvard-headquartered journalism institute, released its list of top-read nonprofit newsrooms. And there we were, sitting at No. 17—across the whole country.

We were keeping company with newsrooms that are far larger, with many more reporters and much, much bigger budgets. It is a small coup that we have grown from a neighborhood outlet into a citywide paper at a time when the news industry is hemorrhaging reporters and readers — it is, in fact, nothing short of miraculous, and a testament to the team we have built here.

Mission Local continues to do one thing well above all else: punch above our weight. We have grown from four staff members in 2020 to a newsroom of 17 — read it! — today. Our budget has grown by a factor of 10 in that time, from about $388,000 in 2020 to a hair over $3 million today. And we have expanded our coverage: It's not just the Mission District anymore. We are in half of San Francisco's neighborhoods with dedicated local coverage, and tackling the biggest news stories citywide.

We began 2025 focused on this neighborhood expansion: We decided to test having beat reporters assigned to neighborhoods — a Tenderloin reporter, a Bayview reporter, a Sunset and Richmond reporter, and a Mission reporter. That has worked well. It has brought us deep local stories from across the city, and it showed us we have a path forward as the only nonprofit outlet focused exclusively on San Francisco. That is what we aim to be: San Francisco's premier nonprofit newsroom. It's at our fingertips.

We also continued to devote resources to the city's largest issues. Our political coverage will remain core to Mission Local, and our series of daily dispatches from 16th and Mission showed we know how to keep elected officials accountable to their promises. In the spring, we kicked off immigration reporting and were the only outlet consistently at the city's immigration courthouses, bringing updates on every twist and turn of the Trump administration's crackdown. We also broke important stories. It won us readership and support, and we hired a full-time immigration reporter thanks to hundreds of donors.

It was exciting to be in the newsroom: Senior Editor Joe Rivano Barros swiveling around in his chair to give assignments, Joe Eskenazi handing out scoops to lucky reporters as if Christmas were on repeat, Meg Shutzer asking all the right questions, and H.R. Smith, our newest editor, working late nights to hone stories into shape for the morning.

We always jump on the news but, so far in 2026, it's looking like neighborhoods, immigration, elections, and the power of tech will demand our attention. We are growing, we are experimenting with new ideas and new approaches, we are training young journalists, and we are going places.

Thank you for supporting us all this time.

With gratitude,
Lydia, Joe, Joe, Meg, H.R.

OUR MISSION

Who we are

Mission Local is an independent, non-profit news site that produces high-impact journalism that digs deep, adds value, and engages San Francisco readers.

Core to our mission is being free and accessible to all readers. We also train the next generation of journalists, who reflect the diversity of San Francisco.

Making Mission Local

This year, you will see Mission Local reporters in more neighborhoods, including the Mission, Bayview-Hunters Point, the Tenderloin, the Sunset, the Richmond, the Excelsior and South of Market.

Dedicated reporters are already walking your blocks, talking and listening. The model we developed in the Mission District — reflecting a strong sense of community while also being attuned to citywide stories — will be our guide.

So, yes, we'll write about the businesses that are opening and closing, and local celebrations like Jerry Garcia Day at McLaren Park or local personalities like the engineer in the Sunset who built free benches across the city. But having our reporters on the ground means we'll also be well-sourced on breaking news as well as issues that impact all of San Francisco.

STORIES THAT SHAPED 2025

16th and Mission

200+

Days on the plaza

250

Stories

“We are just getting started,” Mayor Daniel Lurie announced on Day One of City Hall’s undertaking to be “relentless” in clearing Mission Street and its side alleys of unpermitted vendors, drug dealing and drug use.

We held Lurie to his word: We wrote more than 250 articles assessing how his efforts were panning out at 16th and Mission, the heart of his efforts in the neighborhood. We sent reporters there almost every day for most of 2025. On the ground, they interviewed what—in a loftier context—would be called the “stakeholders” of the site: residents, owners of an SRO, nonprofit workers armed with Narcan, and the vendors and addicts who descend on the street at all hours. They also documented their findings with vivid photography.

Our reporters looked at the built environment, the nonprofits that work in the area and the mayor’s plan for confronting the crisis. They checked in daily and wrote with confidence on the 100th day that little had changed. By the 200th day, some progress had been made.

This is an ongoing story — one that Mission Local embraced as a microcosm for examining how the city works and how it supports and fails residents.

Neighbors devoured the reporting. The series also won awards: We took first place for public service from the Society of Professional Journalists, and this coverage helped us win best community news site from the San Francisco Press Club.

Following City Hall

Our most-read government story last year was no surprise: “Day 71 of the 16th St. Plaza crackdown: Street smells are so bad, residents can't open windows,” just one of over 250 dispatches from the 16th and Mission intersection, where Mayor Daniel Lurie in March declared a crackdown on drug dealing, drug use and other crime.

The story hit a nerve with readers: They could identify with that smell at that intersection and, we assume, empathize with the residents who endure it daily. The piece was part of our efforts to hold Lurie, the police department, and several city agencies accountable for the promises they made to area residents. It is also the kind of bottom-up coverage that has been our speciality in the Mission and that we are now bringing to the rest of the city — and it was written by an intern, no less.

But we're not just on the streets. Another most-read City Hall story: “In texts, new S.F. supervisor wrote she paid workers ‘under the table,’ skimped on taxes.” That one is memorable: The Beya Alcaraz saga in District 4, Lurie's first major blunder, and a story we got because we were well-sourced not only across the city but within the halls of power. It was our story that, within hours, led to Alcaraz's resignation after a meeting with the mayor. That is reporting with results. As long as Mission Local is here in San Francisco, we will keep a particularly close eye on the politics and power in this city.

Beyond the Mission District

We have grown. Mission Local started by covering one neighborhood — the Mission — with the idea of telling citywide stories from the vantage point of a single area. We hoped it would provide deep, hyperlocal coverage that residents across San Francisco would care about and read. It worked: Residents read, donors followed, and now, we're taking that model to new areas: The Tenderloin, Bayview, the Richmond, the Sunset, the Excelsior, and South of Market.

You've probably noticed our expanded reporting over the last year — our stories on the Great Highway and the District 4 recall, for instance, or the only single-family home in the Tenderloin. That will continue and, we hope, deepen as reporters become embedded in more communities.

We're starting with these areas, but that won't be the end. In the coming months and years, we will expand to every corner of the city, assigning reporters to each neighborhood and doubling down on San Francisco in general. Where other outlets go regional to keep their audience, we know there are news deserts within this city that demand incisive, factual reporting. We will dive into these neighborhoods. We hope you'll support us.

RESPONDING TO THE NEEDS OF OUR COMMUNITY

CRACKDOWN 12/16
GRAYAREA.ORG

Immigration

When the Trump administration committed $170 billion to immigration and border enforcement, we knew it would impact San Francisco and we knew Mission Local would step up to cover this unprecedented surge.

As the crackdown escalated, Mission Local became the leading source of news on ICE activity in San Francisco. While larger newsrooms held back, our small team made the choice to dedicate reporters to covering ICE day in and day out. We were often the only journalists in courtrooms or on the streets, chronicling arrests, conditions in the holding cells and the human toll of the enforcement surge.

With our data team, we traced where people arrested in the “San Francisco area of responsibility” were sent. Our reporters knocked on doors, followed up with families, and stayed in touch with those who had been detained — listening, documenting their experiences and describing their scramble for safety. A former Mission Local reporter now based in Mexico City tracked down and interviewed a Bay Area man who had been deported.

Our reporting became essential reading and we knew it couldn’t be sustained without dedicated resources. So, we launched a campaign to raise $300,000 to fund a full-time immigration reporter for the remaining three years of Trump’s term.

You met the moment and made it possible.

Clara-Sophia Daly, immigration reporter

We’ve now hired our first mid-career immigration reporter, Clara-Sophia Daly, a former Mission Local intern who went on to report for the Miami Herald. It’s a critical beat, and we’re thrilled to welcome her back.

This position was made possible entirely by reader support — thank you. Hundreds of you donated, a powerful vote of confidence in our reporting and a clear signal that local, nonprofit journalism rooted in community trust is possible. It is our readers who make it possible for us to respond to urgent needs, hire specialized reporters, and deliver accountability reporting that larger outlets often overlook.

The immigration crackdown and resistance in San Francisco

Attendees

On Dec. 16, 2025, Mission Local hosted an extraordinary event at Gray Area: “The Immigration Crackdown and Resistance in San Francisco.” The event was more than a panel — it was a resource fair with a dozen groups that created a space for our readers’ need to learn and connect with each other — and attorneys, service providers, and other outlets — in the face of intensifying immigration enforcement.

12

Community Partners

From the start, the evening reflected the intense interest readers have shown in this topic. Attendees explored resources from legal defense networks to rapid-response and translation services, and spoke to our reporters who had covered the courts first-hand.

Powerful Panelists

The room was packed with more than 250 people. We got to hear from a remarkable panel of seasoned legal strategists, frontline advocates, and an asylum-seeker who shared her journey from Peru. Their voices brought both expertise and urgency, highlighting how the crackdown in San Francisco is experienced in the courts and on the streets, and how local organizing, often using Mission Local reporting, has responded.

A TRAINING GROUND FOR THE NEXT GENERATION OF JOURNALISTS

Our internship program

Intern hired
full-time

In 2025, Mission Local expanded its internship program to its largest cohort yet, bringing on 14 interns — a milestone. From the beginning, we have been not just a newsroom but a critical training ground for the next generation of journalists.

Interns are treated as full-time reporters and learn how to listen, respond to the needs of the neighborhoods they cover and produce rigorous journalism. It was an intern who first filmed an ICE van barreling through a crowd of protesters in downtown San Francisco — footage that went national. It was also an intern who wrote our most-read story of the year, on conditions at 16th and Mission. It was interns who held down our immigration coverage for months and broke stories from the court, and interns who reshaped our video content and went all-in on Instagram — hello Bad Bunny look-a-like contest! Almost everyone on staff today started as an intern — including a senior editor.

The impact of this model is clear. Mission Local alumni have gone on to report at successful regional and national outlets like the New York Times, the Washington Post, the Miami Herald, the San Francisco Chronicle, and many more, carrying forward the values they learned here. For many early-career journalists, Mission Local is their first newsroom, first byline and first sense of what it means to report on a community.

New journalism jobs are shrinking and the industry is tougher than ever. But we're committed to remaining a place where young reporters can get their foot in the door while producing stories that actually matter for San Francisco.

- Local Media Association, $3,500
- Glencoe Family Foundation, $2,000
- Online News Association, $650
- Institute for Nonprofit News, $650

Mission Local also received just shy of $2 million in individual donations.

We had more than 3,300 donors in 2025 — a 56% increase from last year. Individual donors continue to make up the bulk of our revenue, showing the path forward for a community-rooted, nonprofit newsroom.

We also received two $500,000 gifts from donors anonymous to us. We are incredibly grateful to be the recipients of such tremendous generosity, and are using the gifts to expand our team and bolster our reserves.

FINALLY, A THANK YOU FROM JOE ESKENAZI

Greetings —

What does it mean that San Francisco exhumed all of its dead people and shipped them off to suburbia so that living San Franciscans could reside in newly created neighborhoods ... that look an awful lot like suburbia?

I'm working on this. This means something.

I think a lot about the juxtaposition of life and death in my professional capacity. More than a few of the places I used to work have shifted over to the past tense. I am now old enough to have been in the montage of all the Hearst Examiner editorial employees that sprawled over multiple newsprint pages in the paper's final edition. It's stunning now to see that many journalists in one place. Also: My wife made me throw that flannel shirt away.

And then I look up and, like Billy Pilgrim, it's 25 years later. I'm not going to tell you the journalistic landscape is in an overall happy place. The titanic institutions of yore, a number of which I once served at, have hit one iceberg or another. So it goes. But, here's the thing: There is a lifeboat. You're reading it.

Mission Local continues the ethos of the alt-weekly papers I came up in: institutional memory, deep knowledge of city culture and politics, a hard-hitting style that doesn't play by the niceties of daily journalism — and allows its writers to create the most unvarnished and deeply reported articles about San Francisco. And, here's the thing: The writing is good. It's written with panache. It's as if people actually might enjoy reading something that's written well.

For Mission Local to be producing the kind of work it does in the American media landscape of 2026 is something none of us should take for granted. I certainly don't. I never thought I'd ever again be in a place with this kind of firepower, where talented journalists were so enabled to report so fearlessly on the city.

And it gets better: We don't answer to sinister corporate overlords and eke out an existence based on the sort of embarrassing ads you used to see in the back of the paper. No, we're a nonprofit and we answer to you, our readers, who fund the journalism that resonates for you. And we're succeeding. We're growing. We're getting better and better.

I think a lot about the juxtaposition of life and death in my professional capacity — and, to me, Mission Local is a new lease on life. It's an opportunity to do work at a level I never thought I'd get to do again, and do it in an overall better environment unburdened by a dysfunctional business model operated by deeply dysfunctional people. Goodbye to all that. Not everything is getting better, but this thing is.

Thank you for reading. Thank you for any help you can provide. Because when you enable Mission Local to do the work it does — this means something.

Kindly,

Managing Editor Joe Eskenazi
